

A BOLL ON THE BACK OF THE NECK.
Each heart has its moments of pleasure and pain.
That follow the ebbs and flows,
Each soul has its portion of sunshine and rain.
Hopes, dreams and sunsets of joy,
But there's few of our joys to which flesh is heir.
That with sorrow our evil can so flesh
And fill our whole being with so much despair.
As a boll on the back of the neck.

A man's voice may tell him in tones low and sweet.
Her mother is coming to stay,
He may tell a banana peel down in the street.
And swear in a dignified way,
Somebody may walk on his favorite corn,
He may foolishly say, "I don't care,"
But one thing that makes him regret he was born
Is a boll on the back of the neck.

The brooklet e'en sings in a sad undertone,
The skies are all blue and the sun is so bright,
And nature's voice echoes a sad undertone,
The breeze comes freighted with care,
The future is bright but a desert of night,
The present a misty tale of woe,
Without even just a faint spark of delight,
For the man with a boll on the neck.

BURIED IN THE RUINS.
GLASGOW, Scotland, Nov. 2.—Certain sections at least of this city are excited over the fall of the Glasgow factory, yesterday, that crushed Templeton & Co.'s carpet mills and buried thirty or more women.
The further particulars of the accident are as follows: Glasgow is noted for its high and irregular buildings, and one of these was in the course of erection on Williams street, adjoining the immense carpet factory owned and operated by the Templetons. During yesterday afternoon the high wind which had prevailed during the day increased in velocity until it was blowing a gale, and when it was at its height the immense gable on the new building loosened and fell with a crash on the roof of the carpet factory. On the top floor of the factory was situated the weaving department, fifty women and girls being at work at the time. The falling gable was of great weight, and it crashed through the roof, tearing away nearly all the upper story and doing shocking damage to life. All the work women were hurled in the ruins beneath the broken timbers, and the groans and shrieks of those not instantly killed could be heard above the roar of the wind, which seemed to howl in mad glee over the damage it had done. The poor inmates had no chance to save themselves, for all were bending industriously over the looms when the fearful, fatal crash came. Aid was quickly summoned, and the work of rescue begun. It was almost impossible to get access to those who were lying among the ruins on top of the factory, for the floors had fallen in such a way that it was impossible to gain access from the floor beneath, and it was positively dangerous to work there, for it was feared that the additional weight, added by the wind, would send the floor down another story, and thus complete the work of death so suddenly begun. A scene of the wildest description followed, as the aid of the fire department was called. Darkness came on, and even to-day it is impossible to tell yet the extent of the fatality.

The accident is one of the saddest which has ever occurred here in years. The labor of removing the fallen timbers will be continued on through the night. It has been thus far impossible to find if there was any fault in the building of the gable. The street is crowded with the relatives of the unfortunate women who are buried in the building, and as each victim is handed down her face is eagerly scanned by the anxious waiting loved ones, who are hoping almost against hope that the particular one each seeks may not be among the dead. Those who have been taken down alive tell that suddenly the lights were extinguished and the horrible crash came, and then all was still for a moment.

It is said the building, which is now very unsafe, stands over an abandoned coal pit, and a new disaster is momentarily feared.

The Color of Horses.
There is more in color or likeness in breeding all animals than most people imagine, says an exchange. In large herds of animals in their wild state, color varies little. There is often, so travelers have said, an odd-colored stallion or two in wild herds of horses, and it is not uncommon to find an odd-colored stallion apparently the master of the troop. It is quite certain that this stallion does not get his own color, as the herd remains in its own originality. It has been said that the original color of horses is chestnut, and there is evidence to show that all of the eastern and western breeds are descended from the chestnut. The earliest numbers of the "English Saddle Book" give more grays than almost any other color, but they have become scarcer and scarcer until now among stallions, there is scarcely a gray horse in service in England.

For a long time, prejudice attached to a white horse on account of the fabulous tradition that they could not stand the cold, because white was a non-conductor of heat, a hypothesis easily refuted by the fact that the polar bear, which exists alone in the region of eternal cold, and are happy nowhere else, are white. The same prejudice at one time against black horses, on the other extreme—as black was a conductor of heat, a white horse would succumb to the enervating heat of summer.

In this age of the world it is needless to say that the color of a horse has no thing to do with his constitution. Francis Alexander, a coal black stallion, trotted one of the most exhausting and prolonged races against a field of six others, on one of the hottest days in midsummer, and won it. Jay-Eye See is a black, and won it. No horse on the American turf superior to him in courage and endurance. Hopeful is a gray, during his turf career, he was the foremost horse on the trotting turf. He pulled a wagon and placed to his credit a record for that way of going, which has never been equaled. Charlie Ford is another gray horse that was first in thirty-eight races and twenty-seven heats, beating thirty-two other horses.

These two examples explode the theory that horses of light color are usually of a weak constitution. Hermit, the great English thoroughbred sire, is a chestnut, while his sire was a bay of a particularly marked bay family. Out of a score of sons and daughters of Hermit, which have made their mark, the majority are chestnuts. This same peculiarity marks the produce of Hamiltonian Prince. Those of his get that have made their mark, are of one color—namely, Billy Button, Helene, Happy Traveler, Bertal. Although among trotters there are a large number of bay and chestnut horses, the majority of distinguished horses are bays. The fastest horses among which color is predominant are legion.

Fortunes in Newspapers.
The business of newspaper advertising has been in a process of evolution from the beginning, and it is still continuing. At the commencement only a few of the simplest and shortest advertisements were published—such as wanted, rewards for runaway slaves, and the like. The prices paid for these insertions were merely nominal. As the number of advertisements increased, the prices rose, and the advertiser's sheet with its insignificant attempts at advertising to the remarkable New York Herald that charged and received for a column advertisement on its fifth page $100,000 for one year. The Herald has published in its Sunday edition as many as five thousand advertisements in one issue, and what the Herald did ten years ago other great journals are far exceeding to-day. Not infrequently a single advertiser has been known to make contracts for over half a million dollars in advertising in a year. The career of the World of New York, Public Ledger
